

Black Swan Plc

People who say it cannot be done should not interrupt those who are doing it" George Bernard Shaw

FIND ME THOSE DALMATIANS!

After a period of silence due to various pressures the Swan is venturing out again onto the choppy water of the not-so-new world order. I think a three parter is in order which will address in this Part 1 Cruella's hugely amusing election. In Part 2, the Swan will discuss the Politics of Pipelines and similar important issues and in Part 3 some conclusions on the Post Truth world.

PART 1 OF 3: "NO MORE DALMATION STEALERS" JUNE 2017

"When will they ever learn..."

The incredible arrogance of the unelected PM Theresa May in calling an election has backfired. She has been exposed for the power grubbing clueless Dalmatian stealer that she is. Let's recap: she campaigned for "Remain" then, when Gove and Johnson self-destructed saw an opportunity to switch sides. Clinton-like she sidled up to a point on the stage that she thought people would like.....and got away with it. She became a compromise prime minister.

Then she began to believe her own BS. The pollsters told her she could win, these are the people that called Brexit and Trump so correctly BUT she badly wanted to see a long Prime Ministerial role ahead FOR HERSELF. Please understand that this has nothing to do with strengthening her hand in negotiations or any of the rest of that rubbish this is solely about a Dalmatian Stealing power play. So she went for it.

Mainstream Media (MSM) and the pollsters completely missed it. Right up to the election they kept on saying how brilliant she was and that it was all a slam dunk, Corbyn was a leftist loon who drank beer with terrorists etc. etc. Over the last 12 months this really has been the gift that keeps on giving: through BREXIT, Trump and now the Dalmatian Stealing election it is hilarious to watch as the lied to and downtrodden rise up as they should have done long ago.

So the pelt snitcher ran an incredibly arrogant campaign, lecturing people about security and a safe pair of hands etc. etc. This was really the first time the electorate got a good look at her and they did not like what they saw. Another politician solely out for personal aggrandizement aiming to present herself as the “safe pair of hands” providing “stability in Brexit” but actually aiming merely to consolidate herself in power. Not save the country, oh no, that comes a trailing 12th or 13th if at all.

After the latest terrorist attack in London she stood outside Downing Street and set out her four point plan:

1. We must attack terrorism’s safe havens: er the er what’s it called yes THE INTERNET.
2. We must give the police and security services more powers
3. Was there a point three?
4. We must teach them (the terrorists) that our way of life is better.

It’s beyond parody really. 1. Is simply about removing remaining freedoms from the UK population. 2. Is about the same thing, nothing about getting them to use the powers they already have then? How come all of the perpetrators of Manchester and London were “known to the police”? How will more powers help that situation?

But the best by far is number 4. You see Theresa that’s their view that we need to be convinced that their way of life is better. Or, if that doesn’t work, simply kill us. Of course they are viewing us as decadent infidels so there may be a middle ground here where you personally could convince them that Dalmatian Stealing, helping yourself to a large salary and doing nothing to help the people who have...er...failed to elect you...maybe that would work. Once you are out of number 10, I would certainly vote for you to head to Iraq and give it a try.

Downfall!

Then the predictable happened. The more people listened to her the more they disliked her so the one thing she did get right was not appearing more on television and not debating Jeremy Corbyn: had she done so Corbin would be in No 10. Did none of her advisors study the US election campaign? Didn’t she? Or maybe she phoned up Hilary for advice....

So once again we have a clear protest vote against the lies of the neo-liberal status quo. Nick Clegg lost his seat: another power hungry useless politician who destroyed his party so he could bask in the sun for a nano-second as deputy prime minister. That’s pretty satisfying I must admit and the sight of Salmond and Robertson heading for oblivion is excellent.

But overall, this election, like BREXIT and the US presidential race, has once again exposed the fact that the old lies are not going to work anymore. It is wonderful to watch the mendacious liberal elite wriggling on the vampire stakes, which have been driven into their hearts.

So what should happen next?

The first thing to understand is that there is no “negotiation” necessary to leave the EU. Each UK parliament is sovereign which means (inter alia) that no parliament can be bound by the decisions of its predecessors. Thus to leave the EU the current parliament merely repeals the various treaties, Rome, Maastricht etc. and that is it. That then leads to the default position of WTO rules.

There is no “negotiation” about whether the inflated Eurocrat pensions have to be partially funded by the UK until hell or Brussels freezes over (whichever comes first). No, these are merely hollow threats from the EU, which should be seen as just that.

I will grant you that there is a lot of detail to discuss like the curvature of banana’s and the treatment of fruits and vegetables in general, BUT: there is only one discussion that matters. That is the City.

In terms of the UK economy the City is actually it. It accounts for about 15% of GDP and pays around 20% of the taxes. The rest of GDP, like the tourism sector, relies on the hard work of a waiter called Luigi in Skegness. However Luigi is planning on heading home to Italy, not because of BREXIT but because he has more faith in Beppe Grillo actually doing what he has promised than he has in the Dalmatian thieves.

So the technical issues of the City have to be sorted out but there will be no mass exodus to Frankfurt because nobody wants to live there. I mean, have you been to Frankfurt? None of this will be helped by some drawn out “negotiation” that will merely provide more jobs for the bureaucrats and Dalmatian stealers to drag the whole thing out.

So what we need as Prime Minister of the UK is someone who has been consistent in his views throughout, has been honest in his dealings with Parliament and the people has actually had a proper job before he became an MP and, as a huge bonus, does not believe in the surveillance state. David Davis should be made Prime Minister immediately. The Dalmatian stealers should be relegated to the dark hole from which they crawled.

Is it relevant anyway?

However to me the most striking thing about this election is that none of the massive quantities of wildlife in the room were actually addressed directly. What about the promises for care for the elderly, the NHS, the promises that won’t be kept; there was no discussion about any of that except Corbyn’s neat twist of the Dementia tax. No discussion of how all this might be reformed or paid for.

Even less, no discussion about what might happen to the swathes of unskilled and semi-skilled migrants who will be out of a job in a few years from AI: surely that is the real argument against freedom of movement and in favour of a points system as we have in Australia.

Debt? Any plans for that? Other than more of it? Economy all ok is it? Is there anybody out there?

What actually is the plan, any plan, I mean the Dalmatian Stealer has been PM for nearly a year and has achieved.....Grammar Schools. Yes let me dwell on that piece of idiocy for a moment. Back in the day, when the real Grammar Schools existed, there was not only success but there was also failure. You had to pass a real exam to get into a grammar school and if you didn’t YOU FAILED. You see without failure you cannot have success.

In today’s liberal elite fantasy, which has been foisted on the population, they are educated in an atmosphere where nobody fails. Of course they do later in life but by then they will be firmly attached to the teat of the dependence culture and feel they are “owed” something. Success and failure are two sides of the same coin: without one you cannot have the other. So the Dalmatian spotted grammar schools will be an expensive delusion as there will be no failure....

Lastly, there was no discussion AT ALL about Italy!! All of those completely bust banks and the party leading in the opinion polls, Five Stars, is planning to re-introduce the Lira and tear up the Euro debt. That election has to be held before 20th May 2018. The point being that unless the Dalmatian Stealers hurry along a bit there may not be an EU to negotiate with....then they will all be out of a job.

Surely this is a huge point to make to the Eurocruds: what are you doing to fix Italy? Explain that to us and then we will come to discuss the City.

Conclusion

So the most interesting thing about this election is that of the last four major votes in the Western world the slightly odd one out is Marine Le Pen losing. However Macron is hardly mainstream as his party was only formed a few minutes before the election so in a way he too can be viewed as a bit of a rebellion. People are ignoring the mainstream media view of the world and voting for those they trust.

BREXIT a win for "Leave"

Italian referendum: a win for Grillo and his hijacking of the referendum

USA: a win for Trump

UK: a win for truth

This is a sea change in western politics and it is far from over.

Very best

RP